Yes, I m well aware that no sound can be heard in the space void. And yet, I am rather taken by the theory of Pythagoras known as the harmony of the spheres, in which it is assumed that the sun, the moon and planets all emit their unique buzz based on their orbital revolution. If I could really feel the music of those spheres that move through the heavens, for me it would be the heavenly buzz at the end of the first section of the Bachianas Brasileiras No. 5 of Heitor Villa-Lobos (1887-1959), Brazila S 2087 aminent composer of 20 Century. Although the moon is the main actor to the heavenly buzz at the end that I transport me. Carried out by a set of eight cello and soprano, there are many interesting recordings to explore, starting from the first: recorded in 1945 (only the first section), shortly after the section was written, with the conductor composer accompaniment Bidu Saya â £ o . IA M Partial Versions Sung by, Apparently surprisingly (but perhaps not), Joan Baez (directed by Maurice Abravanel) and Marni Nixon (conducted by Felix Slatkin). But the first version I heard many years ago remains what I feel when I look at the sky: even with villa-lobos conduction, presents the radiant voice of Victoria de los Angeles. Critics could chef on conduction, but all agree that her song is sublime. This recording is below, includes two sections: [1] A Ria (Cantilena) and [2] DanÃf§a (hammer). As for that heavenly buzz, listening to because from about 4:55, continuing through 06:11. Pay particular attention (and perhaps increase the volume only a little), as it floats even higher towards the sky at 6:03.
